

The Second Community Meeting

Students give the results back to the community and citizens draw conclusions on further research

For this community meeting, it is important to start the invitation process on time again. We also invited professionals for this meeting, but it is important to steer the interactions in the right direction. It is very important the residents have the biggest say, and professionals seem to be eager to share their point of view as well. This can be a valuable part of the program, but should be demarcated to make sure it's not too predominant.

And: make sure there's enough food again 😊

14.00: Recap: What is LOCUS? What did we do in CM1, what did the students do after that, and what will we be doing today?

14.15: Show results of the research activities

14.30: Have students present their final products

15.15: Now what? What needs further research? Residents should be in the lead again! Fieldwork Partner has an important role in making sure they get enough say.

15.30: possibility for networking

After this, the cycle can begin again in a new year. It is important to continue with where you were, otherwise the residents have to keep starting over. The students 'refresh' every year, but the residents will be the same. They can decide other areas need to be researched, or other themes, fueled by the previous results.
